

Vania Vigolo

Older Tourist Behavior and Marketing Tools

 Springer

Foreword

It gives me great pleasure to commend Vania Vigolo's new book titled "Older Tourist Behavior and Marketing Tools" to you. The first two parts of this book present a review of older tourists' behavior, while the third part is aimed at analyzing different companies' approaches to catering for older tourists. It is pleasing to note that Vania has devoted particular attention to how companies define and segment their market and how they manage their marketing mix. It is timely that Vania has devoted this textbook to an examination of the older and baby boomer travel market. The United Nations (2013) has recognized the fact that the older generation is growing at a rapid rate, and estimated that more than 2 billion people will be aged 60 and older by 2050. This will account for 22% of the world's population, compared with only 10% in 2000, and this demographic shift will be seen across all continents.

Since I wrote the first textbook on older tourists in 2006 titled, "Growing Older: Tourism and Leisure Behaviour of Older Adults", tourism has become even bigger business for the increasing numbers of older travelers who are being targeted by marketers and travel companies as a growing niche market. In addition there has been an explosion of academic articles that are targeting senior, baby boomer and older adult travel. There is little doubt that the next wave of tourism businesses to prosper will be those that can effectively market tourism products, services and experiences to the older consumer. Among new trends that have been identified in the research are that older travelers are seeking new experiences and creative personal challenges in their travel behavior, as well as becoming more skilful and knowledgeable consumers that require value for their money. In particular, there is a growing market segment of adventurous, independent and special interest older travelers who are increasingly seeking out niche markets that take them to new, exotic and interesting places that may include educational tourism, adventure holidays, visiting heritage sites, and volunteering holidays. It is hoped that this book will provide tourism marketeers with an in-depth understanding of the challenges and opportunities facing them in the future so they can more carefully segment the market and better anticipate older individuals tourism and travel needs through a customer-centered approach.

Dr. Ian Patterson
Associate Professor
(recently retired)
School of Business (Tourism Cluster), The University of Queensland
St. Lucia Campus, Queensland, Australia

Reference

United Nations (2013) World Population Ageing. Department of Economic and Social Affairs Population Division. Available at: <http://www.un.org/en/development/desa/population/publications/pdf/ageing/WorldPopulationAgeing2013.pdf>

Preface

Population aging is one of the most significant trends of the twenty-first century. By 2030, people aged 60 years and older will outnumber children aged under nine years. Even though this trend is most advanced in high-income countries, population aging is proceeding at a fast pace also in developing and emerging countries, and already has profound social and economic implications. Within this context, an increasing number of individuals of all ages participate in tourism activities. According to recent European statistics, the 65-plus age group has significantly contributed to counterbalancing the negative impact of the economic and financial crisis by increasing both tourist arrivals and overnight stays. Hence, population aging poses new challenges and opportunities to tourism, which is by far one of the most important and dynamic global industries.

For these reasons, the older tourist market a viable and fascinating stream of research for scholars belonging to different fields, including the social sciences, psychology, medicine, the arts and humanities, and business. According to the Scopus database, among business, management, and accounting journals, the number of tourism articles dealing with aging-related topics has increased fourfold from the period of 2000 to 2016. This datum gives an idea of the growing attention tourism scholars are devoting to population aging.

Extant research on older tourists has focused on themes such as socio-demographic and travel characteristics, travel motivations, and psychological factors (Jang et al. 2009). Other scholars have focused on older tourists' accessibility requirements, perceptions of service features, and Information and Communication Technology (ICT) adoption. However, despite its potential, the older tourist market is still under researched, and stereotypical images of older adults are still used in marketing practices. Even though a few scholars have examined tourism organizations and their marketing strategies aimed at older individuals, for example in the context of accessible tourism, the literature has devoted limited attention to suppliers targeting older tourists. Overall, there is a need for a comprehensive analysis of the older tourist market that considers both tourists' behavior as well as suppliers' strategies.

This book aims to provide an in-depth analysis of population aging challenges and opportunities from a tourism marketing perspective by combining a demand-side and supply-side approach to older tourists. The methodological approach used in this book stems from the consideration that tourism marketing must be customer-centered if it is to be successful. Tourism organizations must carefully segment their market and understand—or better, anticipate—their customers' needs and desires to provide successful product, price, place and promotion strategies. In other words, the use of marketing tools should derive from scrupulous and constant marketing research activity. Accordingly, this book first addresses older tourists' characteristics and travel behavior, and then discusses how tourism organizations can develop their marketing strategies to target this specific market segment.

This book consists of three main parts. The first part (Chaps. 1–2) introduces the population aging phenomenon from a tourism marketing perspective. In particular, Chap. 1 presents an overview of the main challenges of aging and addresses some of the most common stereotypes about older consumers. In addition, the chapter begins a depiction of the profile of the older tourist. Chapter 2 provides a review of existing segmentation approaches to older tourists by distinguishing between a priori (or conceptual) methods and a posteriori (or data-driven) methods.

The second part (Chaps. 3–5) adopts a demand-side perspective and focuses on key aspects of older tourists' behavior. Specifically, Chap. 3 analyzes the travel planning process from travel needs to travel organization. Chapter 4 discusses ICT adoption among older individuals and displays how technology is changing travel behavior within this specific market. Chapter 5 deals with older tourists' accommodation choices, focusing in particular on hotels.

The third and last part (Chaps. 6–7) represents the empirical heart of the book and focuses on the suppliers' perspective. To provide some insights into marketing approaches to older tourists, Chap. 6 presents a selection of case studies about travel companies targeting older tourists: a Canadian-based tour operator offering exotic adventure travels, a Slovenian-based tour operator and travel agency specializing in slow garden travels, and a British company offering long-term stay accommodation in southern Europe. Chapter 7 draws on the literature review and the case studies provided in the previous chapters to propose some theoretical contributions as well as a practical toolbox for firms and professionals willing to target older individuals.

From a methodological point of view, the first two parts of the book are the result of an extensive literature review of the top international tourism and hospitality journals and industry reports, as well as of empirical studies conducted by the author during the last five years. In the last part, three original case studies are developed following a qualitative research approach based on semi-structured in-depth interviews. This method enabled a holistic understanding of respondents' experiences that could not have been achieved otherwise, given that the suppliers' perspective has hitherto been under-investigated. The book concludes by encouraging further research in this field in order to respond to the challenges and opportunities of this rapidly increasing segment.

My interest in the older-market segment started in 2012. When talking about macro-trends with my husband, he commented about Lombard Odier's Golden Age Fund, a global equity thematic fund designed to seize the opportunity of the long-term aging population trend across multiple sectors. It invests in equities that derive mainly from the aging population theme, including for example health care products and services, healthy food, cosmetics, leisure, and financial planning. Later, in early 2013, Liz Gill, a colleague from the University of Sydney, held a seminar at the University of Verona and discussed a paper concerning older people's empowerment and social engagement, which stimulated me further to explore the relationship between age and consumer behavior in a research area that has been fascinating me since my master's degree in tourism management.

The book is intended to be a helpful reference work for academics, researchers, postgraduate students, and practitioners in the tourism and hospitality industry willing to deepen their knowledge about the older tourist market and its potentialities.

I am grateful to many people who contributed to the completion of this book. First, I would like to thank Prof. Federico Testa, who over the years supported me in my work and stimulated me to pursue new and challenging areas of research. My gratitude goes to Prof. Marta Ugolini, who generously offered me precious insights and advice during the development of this book. I am also thankful to my colleagues Francesca Simeoni, Fabio Cassia, and Nicola Cobelli for their warm-hearted exchange of thoughts and ideas and their daily presence.

I would like to thank Prof. Claudio Baccarani for his inspirational approach to management studies, and the colleagues at the Department of Business Administration, University of Verona, with whom I have the opportunity to work: Prof. Federico Brunetti, Prof. Elena Giaretta, Dr. Paola Castellani and Dr. Chiara Rossato. I am indebted to Professor Angelo Bonfanti for revising parts of the book and giving me honest and valuable suggestions.

I am also grateful to Dr. Francesca Negri (University of Parma) for her stimulating insights on the relationship between ICT and older tourists.

A special acknowledgment goes to the companies that enthusiastically accepted my invitation to participate in my research: ElderTreks, Viaggi Floreali, and Algarve Senior Living. I am grateful to Amanda Dunning (ElderTreks), Erica Vaccari (Viaggi Floreali), and Luis Teixeira da Silva (Algarve Senior Living) who generously offered me their time and experience, helping me to better understand the older tourist market from a supplier's perspective.

Dialogues with academic and industry experts at several international conferences (in particular, at the Tourism&Aging Conference, the Academy of Marketing Science World Marketing Congress, and the ENTER-Information and Communication Technologies in Tourism Conference) contributed as a stimulus to design the structure of this book. At the Tourism&Aging Conference, held in Lisbon in 2014, I had the opportunity to meet and discuss my work with Prof. Ian Patterson, whose studies about older tourists are a reference point for tourism scholars. His book "Growing Older: Tourism and Leisure Behavior of Older Adults" is a milestone in this field of research.

I would also like to thank Springer's anonymous reviewers for their constructive comments in the first draft of my work. Their suggestions were extremely helpful for improving the manuscript. Last but not least, I am grateful to Maria Cristina Acocella, Assistant Editor of Springer, for her continuous assistance throughout the writing process.

Verona, Italy

Vania Vigolo

Contents

Part I Defining the Older Tourist Market

1 Population Aging: Challenges and Opportunities for the Tourism Industry	3
1.1 The Population Aging Phenomenon	3
1.2 Toward a Definition of Older Persons	5
1.3 Major Challenges of Population Aging	7
1.3.1 Financial Security	7
1.3.2 Health	7
1.3.3 Enabling Environments	8
1.4 A New Approach to Older Persons: Promoting Active Aging	9
1.5 Older Persons as Consumers	11
1.5.1 The Ageism of a Youth-Centric Marketing	11
1.5.2 Stereotypes About Older Consumers	13
1.5.3 Addressing the Older Consumer Market	14
1.6 Aging and Traveling: Opportunities for the Tourism Industry	16
1.6.1 Defining Older Tourists	16
1.6.2 Emerging Trends in Older Tourists' Behavior	18
References	18
2 Segmentation Approaches to Older Tourists	25
2.1 Segmentation in Tourism Studies	25
2.2 A Classification of Segmentation Approaches in the Tourism Literature	26
2.3 Segmentation Approaches to Older Tourists	27
2.4 A Priori Segmentation Approaches	28
2.4.1 Age	29
2.4.2 Generation or Cohort	30
2.4.3 Socio-demographics	32
2.4.4 Importance of Tourism Activities for Quality of Life	34

- 2.5 A Posteriori Segmentation 35
 - 2.5.1 Psychographics 35
 - 2.5.2 The Gerontographic Approach to Older Tourists 40
 - 2.5.3 Behavioral Variables 41
- 2.6 Conclusions and Directions for Future Research 42
- References 57

Part II Older Tourist Behavior: The Demand-Side Perspective

- 3 Older Tourists’ Travel Planning Behavior 63
 - 3.1 Understanding the Travel Planning Process 63
 - 3.2 The Travel Planning Process Among Older Tourists 65
 - 3.3 Determinants of Core Decisions: Internal Factors 66
 - 3.3.1 Travel Needs and Motivations 66
 - 3.3.2 Travel Constraints 71
 - 3.4 Determinants of Core Decisions: External Factors 74
 - 3.4.1 Information Sources 74
 - 3.4.2 Pull Factors 75
 - 3.5 Core Decisions. 77
 - 3.5.1 Destination Choice 77
 - 3.5.2 Length of Stay 77
 - 3.5.3 Travel Organization 78
 - 3.5.4 Travel Companions 80
 - References 81
- 4 Information and Communication Technologies: Impacts on Older Tourists’ Behavior 85
 - 4.1 Information and Communication Technology Development in Tourism 85
 - 4.2 Information and Communication Technology Adoption Among Older Persons 87
 - 4.3 The Impact of Information and Communication Technology and Social Media on the Tourist Experience 88
 - 4.3.1 Micro-moments in the Tourist Experience: The Role of Mobile Devices 92
 - 4.4 Information and Communication Technology and Social Media in Tourism Activities 93
 - 4.4.1 Online Information Searching 93
 - 4.4.2 Online Information Sharing 96
 - 4.4.3 Online Booking 99
 - 4.4.4 Experiencing. 100
 - References 100

5 Hospitality and Older Tourists: A Focus on Accommodation

Choices 105

5.1 Defining Hospitality 105

5.2 Older Tourists’ Preferred Types of Accommodation:
An Overview 107

5.3 Models of Service Quality and Satisfaction 111

5.4 The Importance of Hotel Attributes for Older Tourists’
Satisfaction 113

5.4.1 A Focus on Hot Spring Hotels 115

5.4.2 From Satisfaction to Delight: The Creation of Memorable Service Experiences 117

5.5 Emerging Forms of Hospitality: Peer-to-Peer Accommodation . . . 118

References 120

Part III Marketing To Older Tourists: The Supply-Side Perspective

6 Understanding Marketing Approaches to Older Tourists:

A Selection of Case Studies 127

6.1 Purpose of the Study and Methodology 127

6.1.1 A Qualitative Approach 128

6.1.2 Case Studies Selection 128

6.1.3 Data Collection 129

6.1.4 Data Analysis 130

6.2 ElderTreks—Small-Group Exotic Adventures for the Over 50. . . . 130

6.2.1 Company Profile 130

6.2.2 The Target 131

6.2.3 Positioning 133

6.2.4 Product or Services Offered 133

6.2.5 Price Strategy 134

6.2.6 Distribution Strategy 135

6.2.7 Promotion Strategy 135

6.2.8 Active Aging and the Challenges
for the Next Decades 136

6.3 Viaggi Floreali—Slowly Walking Among Flowers and Gardens 137

6.3.1 Company Profile 137

6.3.2 The Target 138

6.3.3 Positioning 140

6.3.4 Product or Services Offered 140

6.3.5 Price Strategy 142

6.3.6 Distribution Strategy 142

6.3.7 Promotion Strategy 142

6.3.8 Active Aging and the Challenges
for the Next Decades 143

- 6.4 Algarve Senior Living—Accommodation Solutions for Long-Term Stays 144
 - 6.4.1 Company Profile. 144
 - 6.4.2 The Target 145
 - 6.4.3 Positioning 147
 - 6.4.4 Product or Services Offered 148
 - 6.4.5 Price Strategy 149
 - 6.4.6 Distribution Strategy 149
 - 6.4.7 Promotion Strategy 150
 - 6.4.8 Active Aging and the Challenges for the Next Decades 150
- 6.5 Discussion 151
- References 155
- 7 Strategic and Operational Marketing Tools for Older Tourists 157
 - 7.1 Strategic Marketing for Older Tourists. 157
 - 7.1.1 Terminology Issues: Older, Senior, or 158
 - 7.1.2 Segmentation Approaches. 160
 - 7.1.3 Positioning 163
 - 7.1.4 Service Design and Customer Care 164
 - 7.2 Managing the Marketing Mix 166
 - 7.2.1 Product. 167
 - 7.2.2 Price. 169
 - 7.2.3 Place. 170
 - 7.2.4 Promotion. 171
 - 7.3 Limitations and Future Research Directions. 172
 - References 173