Oxford Introductions to Language Study

Series Editor H.G. Widdowson

Discourse Analysis

H. G. Widdowson

OXFORD
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Contents

Preface xi

SECTION 1
Survey 1

1 Language in use 3
A sample of language 3
What is a text? 4
Text and discourse 5
Spoken and written text 7
Illustration from a crowded train 8
Conclusion 9

2 Communication 11
Grammar and communication 11
Three kinds of pragmatic meaning 12
Four aspects of communicative competence 14
Conclusion 17

3 Context 19
Conditions of language use 19
Context and shared knowledge 19
Text-activated context 21
Unshared contexts: illustration from a battlefield 23
Context and shared values 25
Conclusion 26

4 Schematic conventions 27
Context and situation 27
The concept of the schema 28
Frames of reference 28
Frames and cultural assumptions 32
Interpersonal routines 33
Adjacency pairs 36
Genres 38
Conclusion 40

5 Co-textual relations 41
Information structure 41
Text linkage 43
Anaphora and pro-forms 44
Cohesion 45
Cohesion and the least effort principle 47
Cohesion and coherence 49
Conclusion 51

6 The negotiation of meaning 53
Systemic and schematic knowledge 53
Communicative convergence 54
Negotiating convergence 55
The co-operative principle 56
The quantity maxim 56
Conversational implicature 58
The maxims of quality, relation, and manner 60
Co-operative and territorial imperatives 63
Conclusion 64

7 Critical analysis 67
Positioning 67
Terms of reference 68
Alternative wordings and persuasive purpose 69
Critical discourse analysis 70
Identifying the significance of textual choice 71
Implicatures and textual choice 72
Implicatures and grammatical choice 73
Conclusion 75

8 Text analysis 77
Actually attested language 77
Norms of usage 78
Patterns of collocation 79
Semantic prosodies 81
Conclusion: text analysis and discourse interpretation 82

SECTION 2
Readings 85

SECTION 3
References 117

SECTION 4
Glossary 127

Acknowledgements 134