ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

This small book about a big subject started as a collaborative project with Doug Field, who realized early on that he had too much on his plate and backed out, reluctantly and politely. I'd like to begin by thanking him for getting the ball rolling. I would also like to thank my series co-editor, Wendy Martin, for all of her patience and goodwill throughout the process. At Routledge, a big shout-out to Polly Dodson for developing the series with us and to Liz Levine for filling in while Polly was on parental leave.

During the summer of 2012 I was fortunate enough to spend three weeks at the Pennsylvania State University for an NEH Summer Fellowship on contemporary African American literature. Lovalerie King organized a stellar group of scholars, led by Trudier Harris, Maryemma Graham, and Dana Nelson, who guided our discussions for three memorable, valuable weeks. I'd like to thank all of them and also all of my fellow institute scholars: space prevents me from listing everyone here, but you know who you are and how much I value your insights and friendship.

I would also like to thank Claudine Raynaud of the Université Paul-Valéry in Montpellier, France for arranging a visiting professorship for me in the summer of 2013 where I was able to make substantial progress on this volume. Un million de merci!

At Suffolk University I appreciate, as ever, the support of Dean Ken Greenberg, in many tangible and intangible ways. One of the tangible ways was through providing the funding for an extraordinary research assistant in 2013–2014, Mary Boutet, whose attention to detail, organizational skills, and eye for editing are tremendous. I owe a world of gratitude to Professor Emeritus Ed Clark for initiating and maintaining the Clark Collection of African American literature at the Sawyer library. This resource allowed Mary and me to conduct most of the research we needed without leaving campus. Finally, Kelly Hoarty provided her trademark cheery clerical support whenever I asked for it, both for this volume and for the James Baldwin conference Claudine and I hosted in France while I was completing it.

I dedicate this book to my students at Suffolk University, past, present, and future.
